Creating a Low-Stimulation Calming Corner at Home

A calming corner is a small, quiet spot where a child can rest and settle at their own pace. It does not need special equipment. A few gentle choices are enough.

1. Soft lighting

Choose a lamp with a warm, dim bulb instead of bright overhead light. Soft afternoon window light works well too. Avoid flickering or glaring light near the corner.

2. Tactile comfort

Add a soft blanket, a large floor cushion, or a textured pillow. Let your child choose which texture feels best, since comfort looks different for every child.

3. Reduced visual noise

Keep the space simple. Use a plain wall behind the corner, store toys in a closed basket, and leave only one or two calm items in view.

4. Low-demand focus

Offer one quiet activity with no goal, such as a coloring page and a few crayons. There is no timer, no right way to do it, and no need to finish.

5. Four-count breathing

Sit beside your child and breathe in slowly for a count of four. Hold gently for four if that feels comfortable, then breathe out for four. Keep it short and relaxed, and stop if it feels uncomfortable.

A calming corner works best as a place your child chooses to visit, never a place they are sent.

This page shares general ideas for everyday comfort. It is not medical or therapeutic advice. If you have concerns about your child's sensory needs, development, or behavior, please speak with your pediatrician or a licensed occupational therapist.

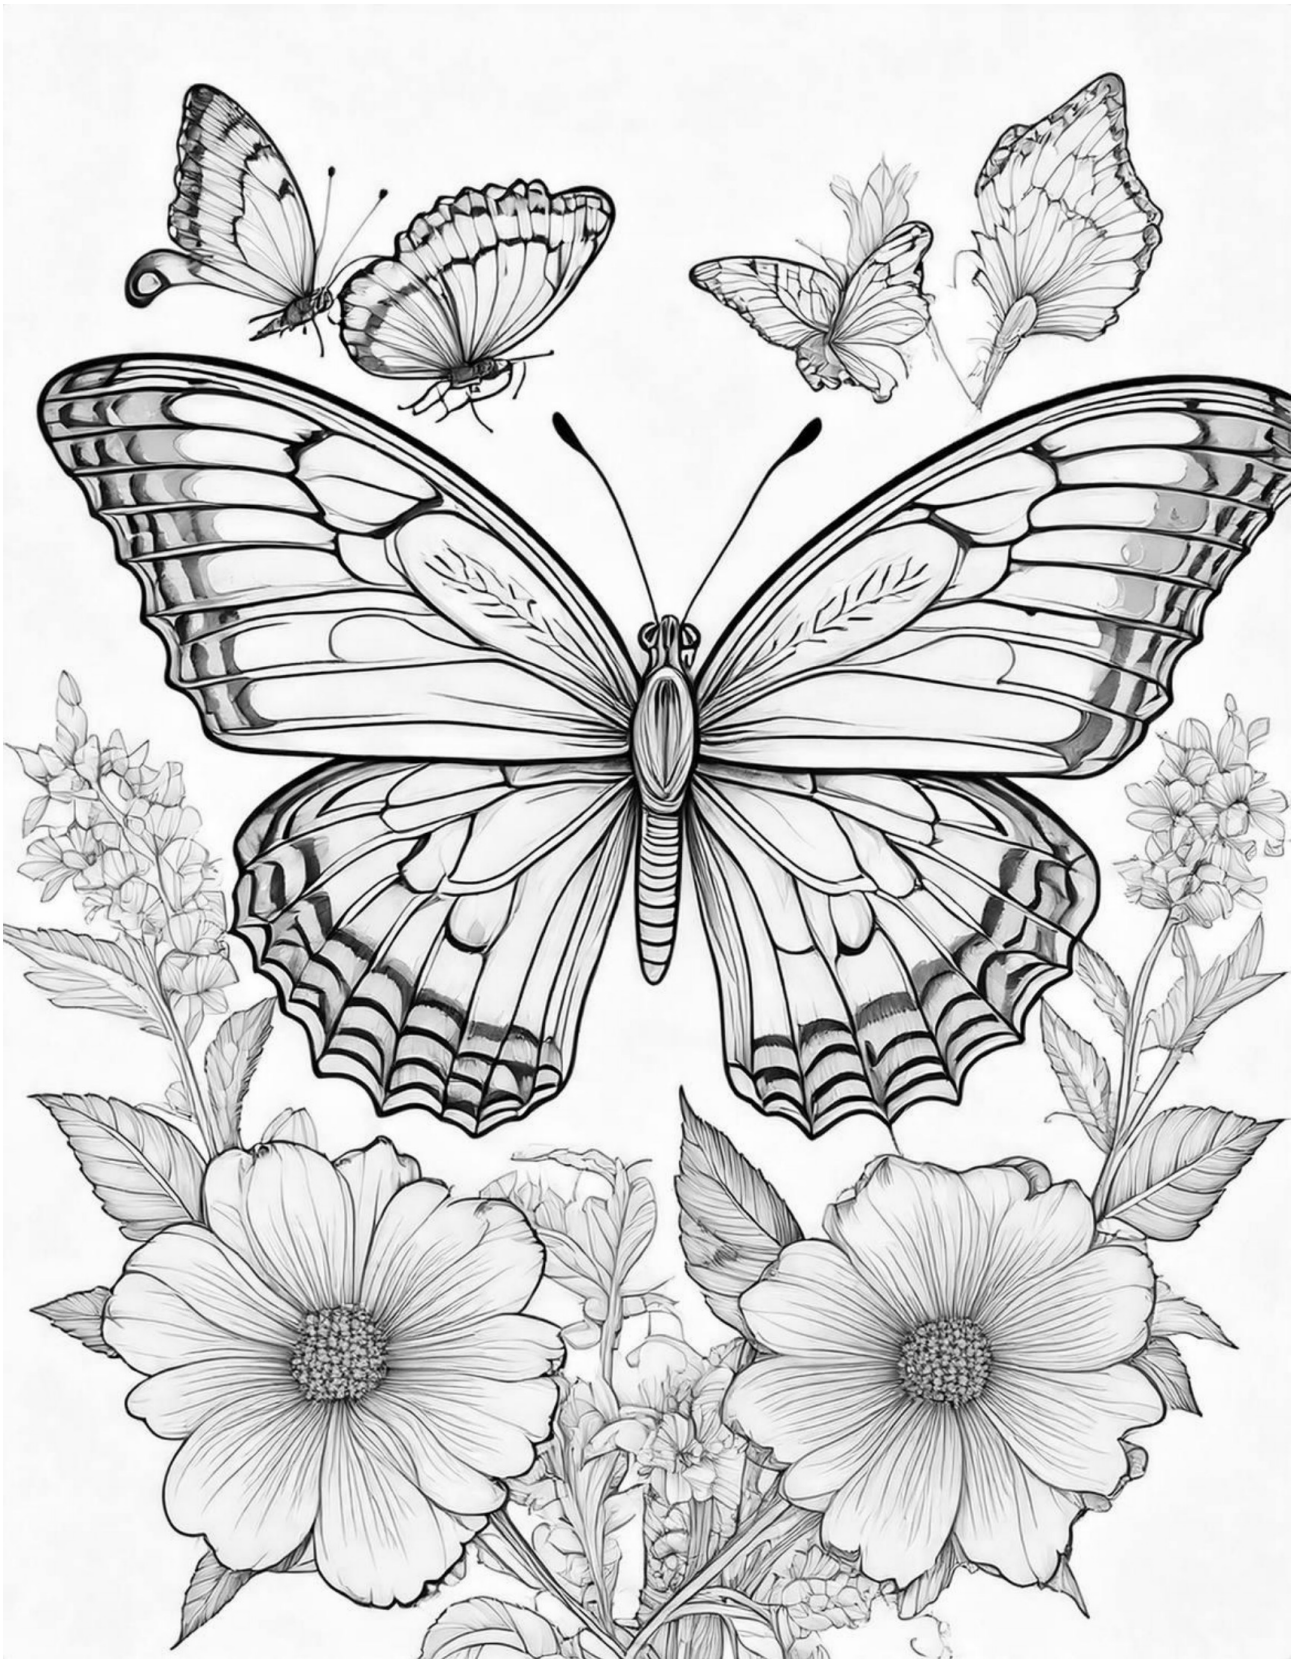

Koala

© Calm Kids Sensory | For more low-stimulation coloring books, visit calmkidssensory.com

© Calm Kids Sensory | For more low-stimulation coloring books, visit calmkidssensory.com

© Calm Kids Sensory | For more low-stimulation coloring books, visit calmkidssensory.com